Virtualstock joins UK government G-Cloud 5 Framework

Software company's The Edge solution will enable public sector organisations to make vital cost savings and boost efficiency

Public sector organisations can now join private sector companies such as Tesco and Office Depot, in benefiting from the innovative solutions provided by Virtualstock (VS) after it announced that the company was accepted onto the government's G-Cloud 5 Framework.

The VS solution, The Edge, will provide a vital new tool to enable public organisations to make the cost savings demanded by government austerity measures in the sector.

The Edge connects with any set of systems, suppliers and platforms, giving organisations total control of all business data, without any interference to existing systems. The increased visibility of how an organisation is performing through data intelligence removes the risk from critical decision-making by supplying the user with one version of the truth – creating more efficient, leaner and cost effective operations. The implementation of the software-as-a-service solution is also a rapid, flexible and scalable alternative to traditional unwieldy systems integrations.

VS Co-Founder Tim Ingham said: "This is a significant development for Virtualstock and the UK's public sector organisations. We have helped private sector companies make substantial savings over the years and we've been keen for some time to do the same for the public sector. And with the pressure these organisations are now under to cut cost, save money and be more efficient there really is no better time to bring themThe Edge."
